1960s: Years of Fire

In 1968, the Center for Community Change was born into a world of upheaval. Civil rights activists had won historic victories, but they were far from satisfied. The Voting Rights Act had been in effect for three years, and a million African Americans in the South were registered to vote.¹ President Johnson signed a federal law that banned racial discrimination in housing. Shirley Chisholm won a seat in the U.S. Congress, the first African American woman to do so.

Dr. Martin Luther King, unleashing grief throughout the land and violence in scores of cities. That year, it felt as if the very air was on fire with change. The Poor People's Campaign mobilized tens of thousands from across the South to demand economic justice. Led by thousands of women, the Poor People's March converged on Washington, DC, where demonstrators set up a tent city.

Latino farmworkers, led by Cesar Chavez and Dolores Huerta, organized to wrest unprecedented commitments for better wages and working conditions from powerful agricultural companies. Fed up with centuries of persecution and deceit, Native Americans launched the American Indian Movement. Women broke free from generations of subservience to rage against restrictive social roles and unjust laws. Lesbians and gay men spent the last of their patience on polite requests to reform discriminatory policies. Within a year, a brutal police raid on a bar called Stonewall would spark the gay rights movement.

The Vietnam War was at a boil in 1968, with 500,000 Americans deployed amidst a massive bombing campaign. Anti-war protests filled the streets, and students closed down college campuses across the United States. President Johnson announced he would not seek re-election. Robert F. Kennedy was assassinated in a Los Angeles hotel kitchen after winning the California presidential primary. During the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, police officers beat protestors and journalists in what would be termed "a police riot." And as the year waned, Richard Nixon was elected President.

Lyndon B. Johnson's War on Poverty

The War on Poverty is the unofficial name for legislation first introduced by United States President Lyndon B. Johnson during his State of the Union address on Wednesday, January 8, 1964. This legislation was proposed by Johnson in response to a national poverty rate of around nineteen percent. The speech led the United States Congress to pass the Economic Opportunity Act, which established the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) to administer the local application of federal funds targeted against poverty.
